Naphthalene flakes have proved to be the easy and cheap way to keep thrip out of glads in storage. After bulbs are dug let them dry for about 3 weeks, then remove old roots, put bulbs in bags, add 1 oz. naphthalene flakes to each 100 bulbs, tie bag and keep in moderate temperature for three or four weeks, untie bags so air can get to bulbs, place on trays in cool (50 F.) storage house. If you wish to you can give them another treatment 4 weeks before planting.

For a good spray use 1 pint of molasses or brown sugar, two tablespoons of paris green (don't increase this as it will burn the foliage) to three gallons of water, keep well mixed while using. We use Bordeaux Mixture and black leaf 40 and put on with power sprayer and as often as potato crop is sprayed the glads get some, and thrip don't worry me at all.

I buy and sell early American glass, and will exchange bulbs for glass or buy if you wish to dispose of any. Attics and top pantry shelves oftentimes can produce things of some value to the right person. Tiny books, old wooden plates, glass marbles with animals inside, glass hats, boots, bottles, candlesticks, plates, goblets, etc. Small china ornaments, dogs, cats, boxes, dolls or doll's' furniture or dishes. Let me know what you have to dispose of that's old.

Visit my gardens and select your perennials, and rock garden plants. Prices will be as low as last year. In June the peonies will be in full glory. Don't fail to see them and select some new varieties for your own garden. I have several thousand plants and all colors that are to be had in peonies.
